BUILDING A BRIDGE TO RENEWABLE ENERGY

Bridges are generally exposed to the elements, meaning they generally get a nice dose of sunlight often coupled with some strong cross-winds. For these reasons, this "Solar Wind" bridge design would seem to make a lot of sense. The brainchild of Italian designers Francesco Colarossi, Giovanna Saracino and Luisa Saracino, The proposed bridge would harness solar energy through a grid of solar cells embedded in the road surface, while wind turbines integrated into the spaces between the bridge's pillars would be used to generate electricity from the cross-winds. The designers say this system, combined with the 26 wind turbines integrated underneath the bridge generating 36 million kWh per year, would provide enough electricity to power approximately 15,000 homes.
